

Chapter 06. Abhyangam (Body Massage / Table Massage) with Video demo

Today's focus is on conducting a full-body Ayurvedic massage on a massage table rather than a traditional floor mat. We'll explore how to blend classical Ayurvedic techniques with a modern spa environment to deliver safe, effective, and dosha-tailored treatments.

Abhyangam detailed video

1. Introduction: Adapting Ayurveda to a Modern Table

In traditional Ayurveda, Abhyanga is often performed on a floor mat or a wooden droni (massage table specifically designed for oil therapies). However, many contemporary spas use standard massage tables outfitted with towels or specialized linens.

Why Use a Table?

1. Accessibility: Easier for therapists to maintain posture and control pressure.
2. Client Comfort: Familiar setup for clients accustomed to Western or standard spa massages.
3. Integration: Allows combining other treatments (like hot towel compress, mild steam) in a streamlined environment.

2. Key Distinctions from Floor-Based Abhyanga

1. Table Height & Therapist Posture
 - Therapists can adjust table height for correct ergonomics, minimizing back strain.
 - Freed from kneeling or bending on the floor—improves maneuverability around the client.
2. Oil Management
 - Excess oil can drip off the table, so proper draping and oil collection measures are important (e.g., protective plastic sheet beneath towels).
 - The table might be narrower than a droni, so be mindful of how the client shifts.
3. Client Movement
 - Turning a client supine to prone or side-lying might feel more conventional on a table. Provide stable assistance if the table is high.

3. Setting Up for Ayurvedic Table Massage

1. Room Environment
 - Maintain a warm, draft-free space.
 - Have an oil warmer or hot water bath to keep the oil at a comfortable temperature (~39–45°C).
2. Linens & Drapes
 - Typically, a sheet covers the table, with additional towels or disposable drapes.
 - For very oily protocols, use an oil-resistant covering or plastic layer under the main sheet to protect the table.
3. Client Comfort
 - A small bolster or pillow under knees (if supine) or under ankles (if prone) can relieve lower back tension.
 - Adjust face cradle or pillow for neck alignment.

4. Ayurvedic Massage Technique on a Table

Step-by-Step Flow

1. Starting Position

- Many practitioners begin with the client prone (face down) to address the back, then move to supine (face up).
- Alternatively, some start supine for front-of-body and end with the back. Consistency is key—choose a routine flow.

2. Oil Application

- Warm the herbal oil in your palms, gently apply to the legs, arms, back, or abdomen, depending on the segment you're working.
- Work in sections: e.g., do left leg and foot, then right leg, then the back, etc.

3. Strokes & Pressure

- Use long, gliding strokes (effleurage) along the length of muscles—always toward the heart to help venous return.
- Circular motions around joints (knees, shoulders, hips).
- Adjust pressure based on dosha: gentler for Vata, moderate for Pitta, and more vigorous for Kapha.
- Incorporate subtle marma awareness if trained, pausing or using gentle pressure at vital points.

4. Transition to Front / Supine

- Ask the client to turn over carefully, assisting if needed.
- Re-drape to maintain modesty.
- Repeat the process on the front: legs, arms, abdomen, chest (if appropriate), neck, shoulders.

5. Head & Face (Optional)

- Some therapists include a mini Shiro Abhyanga or facial marma stimulation.
- Keep a small towel under the head to catch any dripping oil if working with hair.

5. Duration & Frequency

- Full Body: Typically 45-60 minutes, though can extend to 90 if thoroughly relaxing and including face/head.
- Short Sessions: 30 minutes focusing on problem areas (lower back, legs, or shoulders).
- Frequency: Clients might come weekly or bi-weekly for well-being; daily sessions are more specialized (like Panchakarma retreats).

6. Practical Considerations & SOP

1. Temperature & Re-Warming Oil

- Keep a side table with an oil warmer. Re-warm small amounts as needed, never letting the oil get cold or overheated.

2. Communication

- Check in with the client about pressure, comfort, temperature, or any sensitivity.
- Explain each step if they're new to Ayurvedic massage, highlighting differences from standard Western massages.

3. Post-Massage Wipe-Down

- Offer a warm towel or quick shower if the client prefers. Some enjoy leaving a light coat of oil on the skin for extended nourishment.

4. Contraindications

- Similar to Abhyanga: avoid if fever, active skin infection, open wounds, or major medical issues unless cleared by a professional.
- Always adapt strokes and pressure if the client has injuries, fractures, or extreme dryness/sensitivity.

7. Indications & Contraindications

Indications

- General Wellness: Stress relief, muscle tension, mild dryness, Vata or Kapha concerns.
- Circulatory Boost: Sedentary lifestyles, mild fluid retention, or dull skin.
- Intro to Ayurvedic Bodywork: Familiar table environment for those new to Ayurveda.

Contraindications

- High Pitta or Inflammatory Skin Conditions: Excessive friction or heavy oils might overheat. Adjust technique or choose cooling oils if needed.
- Acute Illness, Fever: Postpone until stable.
- Severe Hypertension or Cardiac Conditions: Use caution, ensure light pressure, possibly omit certain strokes.

Conclusion

Adapting Ayurvedic oil massage to a massage table merges ancient holistic principles with the conveniences and familiarities of modern spa setups. By adjusting your strokes, draping, and overall environment, you can continue delivering dosha-specific care, providing clients the comfort and ease they expect in a professional setting.

You've learned how to transition from traditional floor-based Abhyanga to a table massage format that suits contemporary spa norms. Next, we'll explore Podikizhi (Powder Bolus Massage), another unique therapy for Kapha issues and detox support. Embrace each technique to broaden your Ayurvedic cosmetology skillset!