

Unit 3.2. Texts with special reference to Hatha Yoga

Theoretical Subject 1: Basics of Yoga

Unit 3: Foundations of Haṭha Yoga — Texts, Principles, and Practice

Unit 3.2: Texts with Special Reference to Haṭha Yoga

3.2.1 Orientation: why study the Haṭha corpus

Haṭha Yoga did not appear as a single book or school but as a stream of manuals composed over several centuries. These works share a practical aim: stabilize and refine the body-breath-mind system so that meditation becomes natural. They teach cleansing procedures (śatkarman), postures (āsana), breath regulations (prāṇāyāma), neuro-myofascial locks and seals (bandha-mudrā), and inner sound/absorption (nāda, laya). Each text addresses similar goals with distinct emphases, audiences, and pedagogic sequences. Reading them comparatively helps students understand what to practice, when, and why, and how Haṭha methods function as a physiological bridge to the psychological stillness of Rājayoga.

3.2.2 The major Haṭha Yoga texts at a glance

Text (approx. century)	Authorship (tradition)	Structure	Signature emphases	Audience tone
Haṭha Yoga Pradīpikā (HYP) (15th)	Svātmārāma	4 chapters	āsana; prāṇāyāma & śatkarman ; mudrā-bandha & kuṇḍalinī ; nāda-laya	Practitioner’s handbook; bridge to Rājayoga
Gheraṇḍa Saṁhitā (GS) (17th)	Sage Gheraṇḍa to Canda Kapālī	7 “limbs”	Śatkarman-first pedagogy; wide repertoire of kriyās; graded programs	Systematic, instructional
Śiva Saṁhitā (SS) (14th-17th)	Śaiva dialogic text	5 chapters (var.)	Subtle anatomy (nāḍī-cakra), mantra & meditation, householder eligibility	Inclusive, philosophical-practical
Gorakṣaśataka / Gorakṣapaddhati (11th-13th)	Gorakṣanātha lineage	Verses/sections	Early bandha-mudrā focus, suṣumnā , kuṇḍalinī	Concise, technical seeds
Haṭha Ratnāvalī (HR) (17th)	Śrīnivāsa	Thematic lists	Cataloguing of āsanas (84+) , prāṇāyāma variants, practice notes	Referential, enumerative
Dattātreya Yoga Śāstra (DYS) (12th-13th)	Dialogue with Dattātreya	Mixed	Integrates Haṭha with mantra, laya , and rāja perspectives	Synthetic, ecumenical
Siddha-Siddhānta Paddhati (SSP) (medieval)	Gorakṣanātha (trad.)	Aphoristic	Siddha doctrine, body as microcosm, praxis rationale	Philosophical scaffolding
Yoga Yājñavalkya (early medieval)	Yājñavalkya-Gārgī dialogue	Prose/verses	āsana, prāṇāyāma, pratyāhāra , dhyāna ; not strictly “Haṭha”, yet formative	Bridge between classical & Haṭha

Śatkarman locus classicus (HYP 2.23)

“धौतिर्बस्तिस्तथा नेतिस्त्राटकं नौलिका तथा ।

कपालभातिश्चैतानि षट्कर्माणि प्रचक्षते ॥”

Dhauti, basti, neti, trāṭaka, naulī and kapālabhāti are known as the six purificatory acts.

3.2.3 Haṭha Yoga Pradīpikā (HYP): the core manual

Pedagogic arc. HYP proceeds from stability (āsana) to breath-clearing (prāṇāyāma & śatkarman), then to pressure and prāṇa direction (bandha-mudrā), culminating in nāda-anusandhāna (inner sound attention) and laya (absorption). Svātmārāma repeatedly frames Haṭha as a means to Rājayoga, underscoring that the ultimate fruit is meditative stillness, not physical display.

Practice character. Movement and stillness are married to mildness, regularity, and non-injury. Even when terms like “haṭha” are glossed as “force,” the intended force is steadfast discipline, not aggression.

Sanskrit anchors.

- HYP 2.23 (śatkarman list) — quoted above.
- Guidance throughout that measured diet (mithāhāra), cleanliness (śauca), and company of the wise protect the practice.

3.2.4 Gheraṇḍa Saṁhitā (GS): sapta-aṅga pedagogy

Seven-limb scheme. GS arranges training as śatkarman → āsana → mudrā → pratyāhāra → prāṇāyāma → dhyāna → samādhi. Beginning with cleansing highlights hygiene, readiness, and safety before deep breathwork. The text offers numerous kriyās with practical instructions and graded sequences, making it valuable when designing semester curricula.

Pedagogic contribution. By placing mudrā as an independent limb (not just an adjunct), GS brings bandha-mudrā to the center of Haṭha method, preparing the substrate for interiorization.

3.2.5 Śiva Saṁhitā (SS): householder-friendly subtle anatomy

Scope. SS treats nāḍī, cakra, prāṇa, mantra and meditation with explicit inclusion of householders as eligible practitioners. Its philosophical tolerance allows multiple entry points—devotion, mantra, breath, and posture—while elaborating the microcosm-macrocosm imagination typical of the medieval yoga milieu.

Use for learners. SS helps students contextualize techniques within a larger energetic map without making advanced physiology a prerequisite for beginning practice.

3.2.6 Gorakṣa corpus: the bandha-mudrā seedbed

The Gorakṣaśataka and related texts are compact verse collections that concentrate on mūla, uḍḍiyāna, jālandhara bandha, mahā-mudrā/mahā-bandha/mahā-vedha, and suṣumnā activation. They provide terse definitions whose spirit is amplified by later manuals. For modern students, these works clarify why bandha-mudrā are not ornaments but functional levers for pressure regulation and prāṇa direction.

3.2.7 Haṭha Ratnāvalī (HR): catalogues and codifications

HR is known for enumerations—notably 84 āsanās, breath variants, and practical cautions. While less discursive, such catalogues are useful when mapping the terrain and understanding how later lineages compiled and transmitted practice lists.

3.2.8 Dattātreya Yoga Śāstra (DYS): an integrative voice

DYS presents a broad synthesis: mantra, laya, rāja, and haṭha all converge on stability of mind. The text explicitly validates multiple routes—a reminder that Haṭha is not sectarian but complementary to other paths. For first-semester learners, DYS legitimizes mantra and bhakti alongside posture and breath as equal gateways to the same summit.

3.2.9 Siddha-Siddhānta Paddhati (SSP): the siddha rationale

SSP offers doctrinal scaffolding from the Nātha tradition: the body as a perfected field, breath as a vehicle, and inner fire as transformative. While philosophical, its import for practice is clear: discipline refines embodiment until clarity shines through the very processes that once bound attention.

3.2.10 Yoga Yājñavalkya: an early bridge

Although not a Haṭha manual in the narrow sense, Yoga Yājñavalkya integrates āsana, prāṇāyāma (with ratios), pratyāhāra, and meditation in a dialogic format. It demonstrates that somatic-respiratory training pre-dates the medieval Haṭha compendia and stands in continuity with classical concerns.

3.2.11 Comparative focus: what each text contributes to a modern syllabus

Syllabus function	Primary sources	What the text adds
Safe cleansing foundations	HYP ch. 2; GS limb 1	Definitions, indications, cautions (e.g., jala-neti, trāṭaka)
Stability via āsana	HYP ch. 1; HR lists	Families of postures, alignment cues, sequencing ideas
Breath regulation	HYP ch. 2; GS limb 5; YY sections	Gentle baselines (dīrgha, nāḍī-śodhana), ratio logic, progressions
Bandha-mudrā literacy	Gorakṣa corpus; HYP ch. 3; GS limb 3	Mechanisms (pressure/prāṇa), safety, role in suṣumnā-oriented practice
Meditation & inner sound	HYP ch. 4; SS chapters; DYS	From attention placement to nāda-anusandhāna and laya
Philosophical horizon	SS; SSP; DYS	Householder eligibility, siddha doctrine, non-sectarian synthesis

3.2.12 Classical lines worth remembering (with simple sense)

- HYP 2.23 — śaṭkarman list (quoted above).
- Yoga Sūtra 2.46 — “स्थिरसुखमासनम् ।” Āsana is steady and easeful (Haṭha adopts this ethos even while expanding the toolset).

- Yoga Sūtra 1.27-28 — “तस्य वाचकः प्रणवः । तज्जपस्तदर्थभावनम् ।” Om is the expression of Īśvara; repeat it and reflect on its meaning (connects Haṭha with mantra/laya emphasis).

3.2.13 How to read Haṭha texts responsibly (student perspective)

1. Context before technique. Many procedures presume ethical restraint, measured diet, adequate sleep, and gradualism.
2. Safety filters. Strong kumbhaka, naulī, and internal dhauti/basti are specialized; modern curricula appropriately prioritize gentle, supervised variants.
3. Aim clarity. The endpoint is equanimity and absorption, not extreme contortion. If a method inflames restlessness or pain, the dose or choice is wrong.
4. Continuity with Rājayoga. Haṭha is physiology in service of psychology; it does not replace dhyāna, it enables it.
